All these insects and the spider are from the rainforests of Central and South America.

According to scientists there are about 1,000,000 insects that have been discovered, named and described. The estimates of how many are yet to be discovered range from 10 million to 30 million to as high as 50 million!

Although tropical rainforests cover less than 7 percent of the earth's land surface biologists estimate that they may be home to more than 50 percent of all species.
